Scots-Irish Don't Pay.

Special Cable to The Washington Berald.

Havre, Oct. 17.—This is the story, as it has been told, of the way in which the Irish Guards at M.— met the charge of three German cavalry regiments and emerged from the encounter with undying glory,

It is the story of what those saw who were not themselves in the firing line. In a cafe, the landlady said to me, "We so when some French soldiers who had been drinking in the restaurant stood up been drinking in the restaurant stood up and said, "No, you won't. If this be true that the Irish and Scotch do not pay their bills, it is true also that they do not run when the Krupps are turned upon them. They are cooler than we, and the Germans fear them." After that, the landlady, whose hub-band was fighting at the front, refused to take my money. And now something about the seamiest to take my money.

And now something about the seamiest side of the war. Those of us at home who, thanks to our giorious navy, know nothing of what war means, need, perhaps, a reminder such as a visit to the continent will quickly give them. I saw some ladies today, ladies who lately held places in provincial society like our own ladies of the manor, destitute and beginner they believe the seamouth.

The war has ruined them. It has made them line up with the children of the

this, and, while hoping that England will remain as safe tomorrow as she is today, remember that every one of us has his part to play in assuring that safety.
